

How do i stop ads from popping up on my android phone

Continue

Android notifications are great, but they’re not perfect. The way that some notifications pop up on the screen can be annoying, especially if they’re not important. Thankfully, you can stop this from happening. The bad news is that there’s no way to turn off pop-up notifications all at once. You’ll have to do it individually by app. The process is easy, though, so if you do it every time an annoying notification comes in, you’ll have things cleaned up in no time. First, swipe down from the top of your device’s screen (once or twice, depending on your phone or tablet’s manufacturer) and tap the gear icon to open the Settings menu. Next, select “Apps & Notifications.” Tap “See All [Number] Apps” for the full list of installed apps. Find the app that’s giving you annoying pop-up notifications. Now, select “Notifications.” Here, you’ll see all of the different Notification Channels for the app. Unfortunately, you’ll have to go into each channel separately to turn off pop-up notifications. Select one to get started. Next, look for “Pop On Screen” and toggle it off. Repeat this process for any app as well as the Notification Channels you’d like to stop popping up. From now on, when a notification arrives, the icon will only appear in the notification bar. No pop-ups will get in your way. RELATED: What Are Android Notification Channels? In days when 64GB storage has become almost standard across Android phones, storage is usually not a big issue. However, it may become a problem if you are not using your Android phone right. There are basic steps/tips that you need to follow to keep storage space free on your Android phone. Here are ‘mistakes’ that you need to stop making on your Android phone right now to make sure there are no storage woes for you.1828384858687888 By SI Kingston I George Doyle/Stockbyte/Getty Images MagicJack is a popular software that allows users to make unlimited phone calls through their computer and the Internet for a small yearly fee. In order to help users access the program faster, MagicJack pop-ups every time the computer is restarted. For some users, this is a nuisance. To keep MagicJack from continuing to pop-up every time you restart your computer, you can minimize it and put it in the system tray. You will still be able to access the software by clicking on the MagicJack icon on your system tray. Right-click on your system tray. Select the “New Toolbar” option. Click on and browse through the “My Computer” folder until you locate the “Local Drive (C:)” folder; double-click it to expand it. Find the “Program Files” folder and double-click on it. Locate the MagicJack program folder and click on it once to highlight it. Then select the “OK” button. This will insert MagicJack into the system tray. By Lucosi Fuller Pop-ups are annoyances that are meant to make you want to visit the websites they represent or to make you accidentally click on them so that you are taken to those websites. On a pop-up screen, there may be an advertisement or a game that offers a prize if you win. Often, a website will have pop-ups that show full nudity or partial nudity, and many times, you'll find out that on the other end of the pop-up is a virus or some other form of malicious software that will infect your computer and cause more pop-ups to appear or destroy your system. To avoid pop-ups, you'll have to adjust the Pop-up Blocker on your Web browser's Internet options. Open your Web browser, click on “Tools,” and a drop-down menu will appear. Click on “Internet Options.” Click on the “Privacy” tab. In the “Pop-up Blocker” section, check the box beside “Turn on Pop-up Blocker,” and then click on “Settings.” Set the “Filter level” to “High: Block all pop-ups” and click on “Close.” Click on “Apply” and then “OK” to stop inappropriate pop-ups. A pop-under ad is one that opens in a separate window of a website that a user has visited. This type of ad does not impede the user's view of the site they initially visited, but instead opens in the background. This type of ad was first introduced in the mid-1990s with a set of JavaScripts functions for the Netscape browser: / create a new window in front of the current site window.open(URL,windowName[windowFeatures]); // push the loaded advertisement back behind the browser window.focus(); Pop-under ad vs pop-up ad Pop-under and pop-up ads serve a similar purpose, but they create a completely different user experience. A pop-under ad opens in a background window or tab, whereas a pop-up ad opens in the same window. Both types of ads are used to entice a visitor to take a further action, like sign up for a newsletter or complete a pending order. Some ad networks don’t make a significant distinction between the two types since they can serve the same type of content. Pros and cons of pop-under ads Pop-under ads are generally less distracting for users, which can often create a better user experience than a pop-up ad that disrupts the user's workflow. Pop-under ads can also generate more high quality traffic than other types of advertising like display ads. They can be configured to open depending on the specific action a user takes, so it’s much easier to target the most likely conversions and measure ROI. However, many users often perceive pop-under ads as spam and can therefore lose trust in sites that employ a heavy pop-under ad strategy. These types of ads are also significantly less effective on mobile devices, where most users prefer to limit the number of tabs they have open at any given time. Ultimately, the biggest drawbacks to using pop-under ads are the measures most web browsers have in place to block both types of ads. These ad blockers undermine any pop ad use case, which is a major reason why most sites no longer use pop-under ads. Are pop-under ads effective? In an ideal scenario, pop-under ads are effective at inviting a user to take a specific action that’s relevant to the content being viewed. However, a shift toward mobile-first web development and the presence of ad blockers on most web browsers have reduced the effectiveness of pop-under ads in most scenarios. Hover and lightbox styles of site advertising are usually more effective than both pop-up and pop-under ads. This article was updated April 2021 by Kaiti Norton. By Lee Morgan Pop up advertising on the Internet was once seen typically as a sneaky way to advertise adult websites and illegal software downloads, but today they are common on major commercial websites, advertising everything from car insurance to cell phone ringtones. The ads are triggered when a user navigates to a page or moves the mouse over a particular portion of a page, causing the ad banner to “pop up” to the foreground. Advertisers use this strategy as a way to force computer users to see their advertising, but there are some disadvantages associated with this practice. According to the AKA Marketing website, pop up ads are 50 percent more likely to be noticed by computer users than a typical stationary banner ad on a website. But they are also 100 percent more likely to be considered intrusive. Web surfers feel they are having a product's advertising forced down their throats when it pops up while they are trying to read or view content on a website. While pop ups are effective in one way, meaning consumers will have more familiarity with the product, the hostility the user can sometimes feel toward the intrusion can hurt the reputation of the brand and even drive visitors away from the product. It can even make people avoid certain content sites where the pop ups tend to be a regular occurrence. If consumers never see advertising, then it obviously serves no purpose. While banner ads will appear regardless, a pop up ad can be blocked by specialized software. Many browsers have a pop up blocker that will prevent the ad from appearing on the page. If a user's browser will not block the ads, then free software can be downloaded to take care of the task. As pop up advertising becomes more rampant on the Internet, the use of this type of software will become more commonplace. Once blocking software is widespread, the effectiveness of pop up ads will be severely diminished. Websites that allow advertising on their pages can charge the advertiser for the placement of the ads. Often, the rate that they get for allowing the advertising on the site is based on the amount of traffic the site generates for the advertiser. This is often measured in the number of “clicks” the ad actually gets each month. If a company's site only generates 20 clicks per month on a pop up ad, they will be hard pressed to charge $500 per month for the privilege of appearing on the page. But if they generate 10,000 clicks per month, it can be worth it. But the downside is that each time a user clicks on the intrusive pop up ad, the user's attention is redirected to the advertiser and away from the site's content. In addition, if he clicks the pop up, it will take the user to the advertiser's website, potentially making him forget about the original content site to begin with. This creates a conflict for some sites that actually want their own information to be read or viewed. So, the increased effectiveness of pop up ads can actually make this type of advertising less desirable for the site. Camera diffusers have been made from all sorts of cheap supplies before, but never have I seen one made from a Pringles can, a couple of rubber bands, paper towels and some duct tape. Voila, Steve Kushnir's photos shot with his Nikon D5000 are lit more evenly, and for heaps less than pro-diffusers normally cost.
